At "The Bellevue."

F all the charmingly located spots on the New Jersey coast there are none in which are combined so many attractions as at "The Bellevue," being situated near Bellevue Station, on the line of the New Jersey Southern Division of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, midway between Sandy Hook and Long Branch, opposite the junction of the Shrewsbury and Neversink Rivers, and in full view of the ocean and Highlands. The site of the hotel was the place selected by Alderman Van Beverout (the wealthy burgher of Manhattan 150 years ago) for his "villa" called "Lust in Rust," and so vividly described by Cooper in his interesting tale entitled "Water Witch,"—for a further and more elaborate description of which the reader is referred to the above-mentioned narrative. A sagacious New Yorker, with ever "an eye on the main chance," whether business or pleasure, nearly one hundred years ago, selected the very spot where "The Bellevue" stands as a desirable place for a summer resort, and erected thereon a large hotel called the "Ocean House," which became widely known and justly celebrated as an hostelry where the tired merchant and overtaxed professional man could find pleasure and relaxation. Here he could indulge, with oar or sail, on the ever-placid waters of the Shrewsbury or Neversink, or, with gun in hand, roam at will over hill and dale, and bring to his feet the deer and the eagle, for both are indigenous of the Highland forests. The Ocean House was burned in 1858. In 1878, Mr. Lemuel Smith, a resident of the Highlands and formerly a New York merchant, erected the present elegant hotel, to which he gave the name "Bellevue," on account of its magnificent surroundings. Mr. Smith, being a gentleman of ample means and cultivated taste, expended one hundred thousand dollars in building and furnishing this hotel and otherwise improving the grounds about it. This is a large sum considering the size of the building, which will accommodate about two hundred guests.

No expense has been spared in making it strictly first-class. The sanitary arrangements, although originally furnished by a competent engineer, have been recently overhauled, and, regardless of expense, perfected with all the skill known to modern plumbing. The drainage of the hotel is into the current of the river, where the tides ebb and flow, thus taking to the ocean all the débris which might otherwise accumulate. The house has a double front—one on the west facing the river, the other on the east facing the ocean. Ample verandas being on both sides, visitors are sure of a shady porch and a charming view all day long. So admirable is the position of the hotel, and so beautiful are the views, that one can scarcely tire of the scene. The sight from the river on the west piazza is sublimely grand, and reminds one who has traveled in Europe of a "view on the Rhine." The expansive "Neversink" winds its way from Red Bank to the sea, past the lively villages of Fair Haven and Oceanic and the cultivated fields of Shrewsbury, while directly opposite the house loom up like mountains the world-renowned "Highlands." Standing on the same portico, and on a plane with it, looking to the left, is "Rumsen," which a few years ago was an uncultivated tract, but is now dotted with some of the finest residences and extensive lawns to be seen near New York. Standing upon the east portico you observe the grand old restless ocean, bearing upon its bosom countless craft, both steam and sail. On a clear day you can easily discern the huge transatlantic steamers which regularly leave our shores for the Eastern Hemisphere. Looking toward the north, and near at hand, is "Highland Light"—a most welcome sight to any visitor approaching our shores—also Coney Island, with its myriad lights illuminating the heavens. Looking south are to be seen the beautiful cottage settlements of Seabright and Monmouth Beach. The drives in the vicinity are particularly charming. The hotel has all the appointments and surroundings that are certain to gratify the taste and insure the comfort of its guests. Being situated between river and ocean, there is a continual breeze which is always cool and refreshing. There is hardly a moment that there is not a strong current of air passing through its broad corridors. The wind which comes from the land is generally warm in summer, but it is not so here, being chilled by the cool and constantly changing waters of the Shrewsbury and Neversink. On account of this favorable situation, the atmosphere is many degrees cooler when the wind is westerly than at other places on the coast. Mosquitos and other pests are unknown in the sleeping apartments of this house. While nature has done so much to make this hotel cool in hot weather, art has been equally lavish in securing comfort during the period of Eastern storms. The corridors and dining-room are heated by steam, while the parlors and larger sleeping apartments are furnished with ample fire-places, in which can be burned either coal or wood. Discomfort from the weather can never be experienced here.

The internal appointments of this hotel are fully equal to the demands of the times, and are adapted to satisfy those who are accustomed to luxurious homes. The sleeping apartments are large and comfortably furnished ; no expense has been spared in securing luxurious beds. The ceilings of all the rooms are high and have perfect ventilation throughout. The dining-hall is delightfully cool in summer, and the ample parlors offer full scope to the many people who nightly gather there. Electric bells are placed in every room.

Speaking-tubes and running water are on every floor. The water is furnished by the Long Branch Water Co., and is of the purest and most wholesome quality. It is sufficient to say that the cuisine of this hotel will maintain its past high standard. The services of the staff of former seasons will be retained. Select amusements and entertainments will be arranged during the season and music of a superior character provided. Complete stabling accommodations and a fine livery are near at hand and under the control of the hotel. A fine billiard-hall and bowling-alley are within the grounds. The bathing facilities, both surf and still water, are unsurpassed, and are under the direction of careful and experienced bathing masters, who will be ever ready to assist the weak and encourage the timid in the enjoyment of this health-giving amusement. Telephone and telegraph offices are in the hotel. Boats are furnished to those who wish to indulge in a "pull" on the river. For the information of those who desire sea-food, the fish which supplies the hotel are caught on the Banks but a few miles distant, and brought fresh to the house every morning. The crabs and shell-fish are procured in the river but a short distance away.

How to get to "The Bellevue."

BESIDES being one of the most attractive places on the coast, the trip to and from Bellevue is a delightful excursion. On a sultry afternoon in July or August, perplexed and wearied with the cares of business, you leave your counting-room or office for Pier 8 North River, whence you go on board one of the palatial steamers which leave hourly for Sandy Hook and the Highland shore. Passing out of the North River through the Narrows and into the broad bay and ocean, you are soon landed at the Hook. Immediately getting on board the cars in waiting, you are whirled through pine forests, which seem to be emitting their resinous perfumes in your behalf. In a few moments a wonderful panorama awaits your vision—the magnificent Highlands, the placid Shrewsbury dotted with pleasure craft, the elegant homes which adorn its shores, the irresistible ocean—all break upon you simultaneously, yet before you can fully realize the entrancing scene, the conductor announces "Bellevue."

Here you are—refreshed by the sail, invigorated by the bracing atmosphere, ready to enjoy its many attractions. The trip can be accomplished in a little more than one hour each way.
